Bhotekoshi River Rafting is popular for the technical white water rafting in Nepal. Bhotekoshi River originates in the Tibetan region and the steep landscape makes this river trip exhilarating. To enjoy the trip, first, you drive to Lamoshangu through the Araniko Highway for about three hours and begin the rafting. Depending on your leisure and interest, the trip can be of a single day or a couple of days. If you love to deal with the thrilling rapids or love Kayaking, you will find Bhotekoshi perfect. The rapids here range from class IV to V at its higher flow, and class III at its own level. It is renowned as the best River for the challenging river trip near the Kathmandu valley. If the weather is clear on the very day, then the charm increases with the Himalayan views and the forest greeneries along with the terraced mountain villages. Applying the safety measures, you will get various places for the water fun, jumping from the massive rocks on the bank of the River. Wide beach, precipitous slopes, cascading waterfalls and the steel bridges over the River fascinate you. The best rafting seasons for the rafting are October and December and February and April.
